A couple points about word counts for books of the Bible:

Bible word counts are tricky. Are you counting in the original Hebrew and Greek, or in the most recent English translation? Hebrew word counts tend to be slightly shorter than English translations because Hebrew sentence structure is different. But overall, in most cases the relative sizes of the books of the bible usually remain consistent across languages.

One other caveat is that in Hebrew the books of Samuel, Kings, and Chronicles are not divided into two parts. Which means that an argument could be made for Kings to be the longest book in the bible, at 39,145 words, followed by Chronicles (38,013) and Samuel (38,007).

Further, it could also be claimed that Luke-Acts was originally written as a single book, only to be divided later. If so, it would rank fourth (37,933) in terms of original Greek words.

But as Christians split up Samuel, Kings, Chronicles and Luke-Acts into two parts, Jeremiah then becomes the longest single book at 33,002 words.

None of this matters in terms of faith, of course. It's just interesting to see how the Bible was constructed.

A Brief Timeline of the Prophets

As with many things in the bible, the prophets are not as simple as they appear. Famous prophets like Elijah and Elisha don't have their own books, although they do take up large parts of the books of the Kings.

Jonah is a strange one on many levels. He was from northern kingdom of Israel, his mission was to Nineveh, capital of Assyria. The actual story was almost certainly written later, possibly during the Exile.

Joel is set in the 8th century BCE, but probably wasn't written until many centuries later.

Daniel is traditionally regarded as a prophet of the Exile (or perhaps very early Return), but mainstream scholars place the book of Daniel very late – possibly as late as the 2nd century BCE.

Authorship of Isaiah is widely disputed. Traditionally, Isaiah ben Amoz was considered the author of the entire book, but most scholars no longer hold this view. Some say that there were three 'Isaiahs' – Proto-Isaiah (ch 1-39), Deutero-Isaiah (ch 40-55), and Trito-Isaiah (ch 55-66). Others think multiple authors and editors.

Based on the size of their books the prophets are usually divided into Major and Minor groupings, but it's more accurate to list them into four groupings based on time and place. [All dates BCE]

Prophets to the (northern) Kingdom of Israel:

Jonah (790's?)

Joel (790's - 760's?)

Amos (760's - 740's)

Hosea (750's - 720's)

Proto-Isaiah – Isaiah ben Amoz (740's - 730's)

Habakkuk (630's)

Zephaniah (630's)

Jeremiah (640's - 609)

Deutero-Isaiah? (590's?)e

Prophets during the Exile in Babylon:

Obadiah (586?)

Ezekiel (590 - 570's)

Daniel (traditional date)

Jonah written?

Prophets after the Return from Exile:

Trito-Isaiah (520's?)

Haggai (520?)
